SDG 11.4.5 | Affordable housing for students

Evidence attachment for THE Sustainability Impact Ratings 2027

DATA PERIOD	2025 reporting period; Academic Year 114 statistics dated 15 October 2025
SELECTED OPTIONS	Providing housing; Providing financial aid

Recommended English answer

In 2025, National Yunlin University of Science and Technology provided student dormitory accommodation under its Student Dormitory Management Guidelines. The Guidelines identify undergraduate and graduate students as eligible applicants and establish application and bed-allocation procedures. For academic year 114 (2025), Ministry of Education data reported 2,297 students living in YunTech's own dormitories, no students in leased dormitories, 5,557 students renting off campus, and a university-provided accommodation ratio of 29.25%. The Guidelines also give low-income students eligible for Ministry support exemption from the lottery and state that the Ministry subsidy covers the accommodation fee, including air-conditioning equipment charges. The University's low-income student housing subsidy service requires proof of low-income status and an application for university housing; it is processed once per semester and covers semester and winter/summer accommodation fees, excluding the deposit.

Why these options should be selected

Providing housing	Ministry data for academic year 114 report 2,297 students in YunTech's own dormitories and a university-provided accommodation ratio of 29.25%.
Providing financial aid	The Guidelines and the university service page describe low-income student eligibility and a subsidy covering semester and winter/summer accommodation fees, excluding the deposit.

Important limitation

Do not select Evaluating affordability on the basis of the earlier NT$4,000 rent and NT$60,000 salary figures. No official 2025 source has been identified for those two figures or for the claimed 6% housing-cost ratio.

Official source: Ministry of Education student accommodation statistics

Academic year: 114 (2025) | Statistical reference date: 15 October

YunTech record (English translation of the official table)

Students applying for university housing (A)	2,578
Students living in university-owned dormitories (B)	2,297
Students living in leased university dormitories (C)	0
Students renting housing off campus (D)	5,557
University-provided accommodation ratio E=(B+C)/(B+C+D)	29.25%

What this source proves

This official Ministry table directly measures the University's student-housing provision. It shows that 2,297 students actually lived in YunTech-owned dormitories in academic year 114 and reports a 29.25% university-provided accommodation ratio. This is direct evidence for Providing housing.

Source identification

Ministry of Education Higher Education Data: Student accommodation numbers and ratio, school-level statistics; National Yunlin University of Science and Technology; academic year 114.

Definition note

The Ministry defines the ratio from actual university-provided residents divided by university-provided residents plus students renting off campus. The table uses 15 October as the annual statistical reference date.

Official source: Student Dormitory Management Guidelines

Latest revision shown on the document: 30 December 2025

Relevant official content (English translation)

The Guidelines state that undergraduate students and graduate students may apply for university dormitory accommodation. They establish the application period, require an accommodation contract, and provide that the Student Counseling and Guidance Section allocates rooms according to prescribed priority rules; when beds are insufficient, allocation is made by lottery. The Guidelines also state that children of low-income households who qualify for Ministry of Education support may apply for accommodation without the lottery, subject to official proof. Finally, the Guidelines state that the Ministry subsidy for low-income households covers the accommodation fee, including the air-conditioning equipment fee.

What this source proves

This is the strongest single source for direct provision of student housing and preferential access for low-income students. It documents eligible users, application and allocation procedures, a low-income exemption from the lottery, and the scope of the Ministry housing subsidy.

Scope note

The revision date is 30 December 2025. It is therefore used here as a 2025 official policy source; it is not presented as an occupancy or year-end bed statistic.

Source 3: 2025 Ministry on-campus housing subsidy policy

Relevant official content (English translation)

The Ministry policy published on 29 May 2025 provides on-campus housing subsidies to eligible students. It sets the standard subsidy at NT$5,000 per semester and the subsidy for low-income or middle-income students at NT$7,000 per semester. The policy allows schools to deduct the subsidy from the student's accommodation charge.

What this source proves

This dated 2025 policy establishes a concrete financial-support mechanism and amount. YunTech's service page identifies the university's process for delivering housing subsidies to eligible low-income students.

Source 4: YunTech low-income student housing subsidy service

Relevant official content (English translation)

The service is provided under the Ministry of Education's disadvantaged-student aid plan. Eligible applicants must have official low-income household documentation and apply for YunTech student housing. The subsidy is processed once per semester and covers semester accommodation fees and winter/summer accommodation fees; the accommodation deposit is excluded. Students who have already completed tuition-fee reduction procedures do not need to submit a separate application.
